

GLOBAL ADAPTATIONS

7 CROSS-CULTURAL COLLABS

Unlike before, fashion no longer has a clear centre. Ideas are moving between Paris, London, New York, Seoul, Tokyo, Asia, Africa, and Latin America in fascinating ways. Look at the new generation of designers coming through — from Diotima's Jamaican-rooted craft and crochet to Post Archive Faction's futuristic Korean design language. Leading fashion magazines also spotlight emerging-designers who approach the craft through varied cultural and material perspectives. We are borrowing, adapting, and reinterpreting each other constantly. And that is what makes fashion exciting today, as the best work often happens when cultures meet.

8 BESPOKE OVER MASS-PRODUCED

In a world where almost everything can be manufactured instantly and at scale, it's special to have something made specifically for you. The bespoke houses of London's Savile Row have understood this for generations, building their reputation tailoring garments around the individual rather than forcing them into a standardised shape. The same thinking exists in personalised jewellery, made-to-measure footwear, and monogrammed leather goods. Couture has always understood this. The future of luxury is less about having more choices and more about having something that belongs only to you.

CUSTOM

PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES