

"One of my biggest lessons at Ermenegildo Zegna, was that the best tailoring should look effortless."
— Owais Shaikh, Founder, OSBYOS

DRESSING THE STARS

Owais Shaikh – OSBYOS, Mumbai

For someone with a client roster that boasts A-listers like Shah Rukh Khan, Virat Kohli, Ranbir Kapoor, Kartik Aryan, and Vicky Kaushal, Owais Shaikh keeps a surprisingly low profile. He'd rather his tailoring at OSBYOS take centre stage.

"The drama can come through proportion, silhouette, fabric, texture, and attitude," says Shaikh. "One of my biggest lessons at Ermenegildo Zegna, where I started my design career, was that the best tailoring should look effortless. The shoulder, balance of the jacket, roll of the lapel, placement of button—every technical detail matters."

His stints at Zegna and Tom Ford taught him to craft precise and sharp silhouettes, while also reinforcing the importance of fabric and material in his mind. Over the years, tailoring for movie celebrities taught him that dressing an actor wasn't merely about styling him into a beautiful garment.

"I've learnt to pay attention to their needs. Before I started making suits for Shah Rukh Khan, I listened to him patiently. That conversation helped me understand how serious he is about clothing and fit."

Moreover, with the conversation moving from 'what is fashionable' to 'what suits me,' he has been able to mould his designs while retaining a classical elegance that's characterised by his signature balance of proportions and ergonomics.

CODES OF CLASS

Aditya Jain – Indian Tailoring Company, Delhi

With globalisation, the internet, and social media erasing borders and democratising both style and craft, the world of fashion has undergone a drastic cultural evolution over the past two decades—a transition that Aditya Jain, the Founder of Indian Tailoring Company (ITC) has been part of.

"Historically, suit-making was closely guarded in pockets of Italy and England. My time at the Savile Row Academy shattered that insular view," Jain recalls. "I sat alongside fellow students from Japan, South Korea, China, Trinidad, and beyond—all united by a single vision: to master the craft and bring authentic bespoke tailoring back to our home nations."

ITC doesn't focus on any one signature look. Instead, their identity is rooted in their cuts: dramatic, sweeping peak lapels with a lowered gorge, paired with a coat structured with a fuller chest and a distinctly nipped waistline.

There's also Jain's deep love for colour play—pairing unconventional hues that traditionally clash and subtly harmonising them through precise pocket squares, linings or neckwear.

"Structurally, I experiment constantly with drape, canvas weight, and fabric blends, marrying classic Savile Row architecture with lighter fabric weights suited to modern climates and lifestyles." ■

From top: Sharp construction, tailored silhouettes, unconventional hues, and an experimental approach to draping define the aesthetic of Indian Tailoring Company and OSBYOS