

penguins lazing on rocky shores, feeding their chicks, grooming themselves, or plunging into the sea. The north, on the other hand, isn't one destination. In Churchill, Canada—known as the polar bear capital—spot the majestic white mammals along Hudson Bay from tundra buggies, on a walking safari, or even from specially located lodges. In Svalbard, Norway, smaller expedition vessels navigate the fjords, where you can also spot walruses, Arctic foxes, and reindeer. Greenland's broader wildlife experience offers a chance to encounter musk oxen, beluga whales, narwhals, Arctic foxes, and a myriad species of seabirds.

Recommended tour: Quark Expedition, starts from US$14,595 (Antarctica), US$7,970 (Svalbard), US$22,090 (Canada), and US$13,040 (Greenland)

THE KENYAN 'SPECIAL 5'

Far afield from the classic Masai Mara Safari, the arid scrublands of Northern Kenya has effectively created its own alternative 'Special 5' or the 'Samburu 5' of the grevy's zebra, reticulated giraffe, gerenuk, beisa, and Somali ostrich. Guides at the Samburu National Reserve, Buffalo Springs National Reserve, and Shaba National Reserve explicitly build journeys around these species, especially near the Ewaso Ng'iro River that serves as the main gathering point for wildlife. Expect low-density game viewing and stay options at luxury lodges and camps.

Recommended stay: Sasaab Luxury Eco-Lodge; starts from US$1,329 per adult per night on standard allocations; additional conservancy or park reserve fees of US$160 per person

Clockwise from top: Polar bear cubs play fighting; penguins in Antarctica; the grevy's zebra, reticulated giraffe, gerenuk, and beisa—all part of the Kenyan 'Special 5'

PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES