3 INDIGENOUS ART ENTERS THE BIG LEAGUE

No longer labelled 'tribal' but better known by the moniker 'indigenous art'. The valuations for some of these artists are going through the roof; the recent Pundole auction is a case in point. A large painting by Gond artist Jangarh Singh Shyam with a gasp-worthy estimate of ₹4-6 crore sold for a record ₹18 crore, and several other works by him offered equally excellent results, proving that it is now being considered mainstream art.

4 THE MINIATURE IS BACK

The revival of the miniature—displayed at home till the 1970s—is driven by a rediscovery of the amazing art created in ateliers, regarded by many as more stunning than anything contemporary. Word on the street is that both the dedicated and general collectors are now taking an interest in one of the finest schools of Indian painting.

EVERYDAY ART

5 THE ERA OF 'EVERYTHING IS A COLLECTIBLE'

India is on the cusp; everything we regarded as junk is getting its due: carpets, chandeliers, silver objects, coins, table settings, and even fashion. Maximalist houses are now regarded as living museums. Art is no longer narrowly defined, and everything is grist to its mill.
