SOCIAL SPORTS

7 FITNESS AS COMMUNITY

The new fitness membership may come with a WhatsApp group. Running clubs, HYROX, padel, pickleball, cycling groups, and recreational sports are turning exercise into a social experience and creating communities outside the traditional gym. Part of their appeal is the ritual around the activity—the early start, the familiar faces, the post-run coffee. For people bored by solitary gym sessions, such communities are becoming a reason to keep showing up.

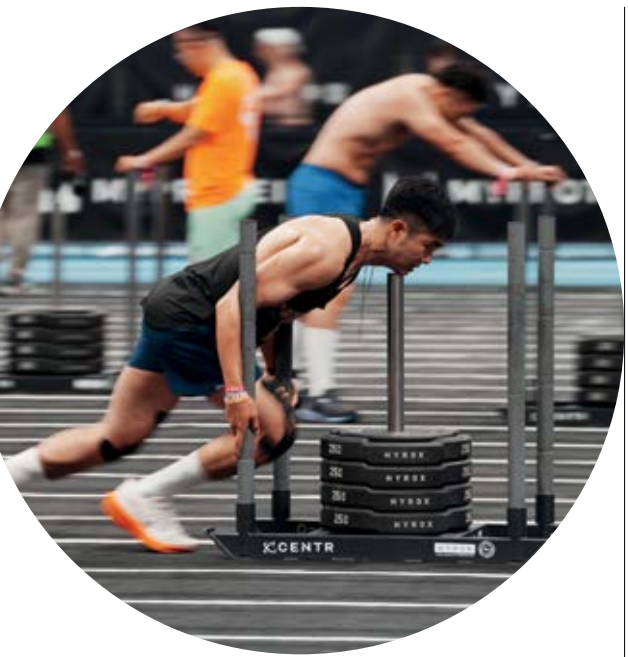

EASY MOVEMENT

8 EXERCISE SNACKING

Who says exercise has to mean an hour at the gym? A brisk walk between meetings, a few flights of stairs or some squats while you're waiting for dinner can all get you moving. These short bursts—often called exercise snacks—are being studied for their effects on fitness and metabolic health. It's an easy way to move more without making a whole production of it.

HYBRID HEALTH

9 THE HYROX HERO

The line between strength and endurance is blurring. HYROX has helped drive the shift, combining eight 1km runs with eight functional workout stations in a standardised race format. Beyond the event itself, hybrid training is bringing running, lifting, and conditioning into the same programme. The appeal is straightforward: You train to be come strong, fast, and to be able to keep going.

TRAVEL TO TRAIN

10 THE FITNESS HOLIDAY

A growing number of people are booking holidays around what they want to do physically: run in the mountains, cycle through a new country, hike, surf or spend a week at a fitness retreat. Hotels are catching up, offering better gyms, classes, and recovery facilities. For those who train regularly, it means keeping up the routine while training your sights on a new elsewhere. ■

PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES

