Note: All these programmes require at least a master's degree or an equivalent qualification. Broadly known as Fellow Programmes in Management (FPM), they may carry different titles across business schools. These are full-time, residential programmes that typically run for 3 to 6 years. Most FPMs do not charge tuition fees, and many offer a monthly stipend to scholars, though a few institutions do levy fees. While more than 100 FPM programmes exist across India, only the top 10 are listed here due to gaps and inconsistencies in available data

Notes: Only programmes that mandate at least 10 years of work experience were included in the ranking. The ranking is based solely on objective data gathered through secondary research. Designed for senior professionals, all these courses are offered in blended or online formats and typically run for 10–12 months—with the sole exception of ISB's Global Advanced Management Programme, which lasts five months

Engineers comprised 84% of students at the top 25 B-schools in 2015. Today, they account for 40%. Women's representation has risen from 27.8% to 37.5% ries at the top 10 have almost doubled since 2015 to Rs 29.9 lakh per year. For schools ranked 76-100, they fell this year to Rs 7.26 lakh.

Stability at the top also hides churn inside classrooms. Engineers comprised 84 per cent of students at the top 25 schools in 2015. Today, they account for 40 per cent. Women's representation has risen from 27.8 to 37.5 per cent. Damodaran says he finds it easier to teach 100 history majors to value companies than to persuade 100 engineers to trust their imagination. Foreign Secretary Vikram Misri, the lone history graduate in his XLRI class, learnt to frame problems, weigh the cost of inaction and commit.

Other distinguished alumni echo these lessons. World Bank president Ajay Banga says IIM Ahmedabad taught him to "define the real problem before trying to solve it". Chief Economic Advisor V. Anantha Nageswaran recalls learning to "decide without perfect information". Former PepsiCo CEO Indra Nooyi credits IIM Calcutta with teaching her to "hold my own in a room full of men" and translate classroom concepts into real-world solutions.

AI makes these human capabilities more valuable. "For us, the biggest change is a shift from teaching analysis to teaching judgement," says IIM Ahmedabad Director Bharat Bhasker. His institute has launched the Rs 100 crore-endowed Krishnamurthy Tandon
