The faculty has to be geared up for this. There is one aspect Nagaraj insists on: "We must put friction back into the classroom, so that you can learn in spite of AI, not because of it." That means encouraging the staff to exact more effort from students in the pursuit of their goals, enlivened by actual experiences. He also insists on including industry experts in teaching sessions, as well as imparting hands-on industry experience to new faculty. ■

THE BEST LESSONS I LEARNT

PRADEEP KAR
Founder & Chairman, Microland, Batch of 1983

"Great leadership begins when you look beyond yourself and work for the greater good. SPJIMR instilled in me the belief that management is ultimately about people, purpose and creating opportunities for others to succeed. Building Microland over 37 years in an industry transformed repeatedly by technology has reinforced this conviction. Our journey has demanded constant reinvention, but our enduring purpose has remained creating value for our customers, opportunities for our people and a lasting institution. Leadership is measured by what we build, the lives we touch and the legacy we leave behind."

DEEPAK SHETTY
CEO and MD, JCB India
Batch of 2005 (PGDM)

"SPJIMR founder M.L. Shrikant created a gurukul-like environment, constantly emphasising the importance of balancing IQ with EQ in achieving managerial excellence. Under his guidance, I learnt that leadership was also about creating a meaningful impact through people, purpose and values. He taught us that decisions need not always be driven by data. Sometimes, one must trust one's instincts. When I joined JCB, I heard the same philosophy from chairman Lord Bamford who told me that he relied on his gut feeling while deciding to invest in India in 1979. Such decisions always need moral courage and strong values."
