Some clients enjoy the opportunity to come to the private office. Some come to Goodwood to get a sense of what our craftspeople are capable of doing"

JULIAN JENKINS
DIRECTOR OF SALES & BRAND, ROLLS-ROYCE MOTOR CARS

"A grandfather wanted to commission birth dates of the children in the car. That's highly personal. Each time his grandchildren got in the car, they would search for their birth dates around the car in the Startlight Headliner roof," says Jenkins.
Sheetal Jain, founder and CEO of Luxe Analytics, which works with the British luxury carmaker in India, says some Rolls-Royce buyers have shelled out as much as ₹5 crore only on customisation; additions included intricate hand-stitched upholstery and personalised interiors. It's no surprise Indian clients hold on to their Rolls-Royce 40% longer compared to other markets.

The Phantom, the flagship sedan, is particularly popular. Its share in India is considerably higher than in the wider Asia-Pacific region, says Jenkins. "The Phantom is the pinnacle of Rolls-Royce. It is also a canvas by which our clients can express themselves through craftsmanship," he says.

"Our Indian patrons at the time of the Maharajas (1908-1934) pioneered what Rolls-Royce is today in terms of bespoke and personalisation," says Jenkins. Until 1949, every Rolls-Royce was just a chassis; coachbuilders would then create what customers wanted. For connoisseurs, Rolls-Royce offers Coach-
