laser light," says Dhillon.

At Tata Motors Passenger Vehicles-owned luxury carmaker JLR, demand for personalisation in India has more than doubled in the past two years. "The new Indian luxury customer is younger, self-made and well-travelled. They don't want to arrive in the same car as someone else. For them, personalisation is not about adding features, it's about creating an identity," says Rajan Amba, Managing Director, JLR India.

In India, JLR offers personalisation through its SV Bespoke commissioning service. "Over 10% of our Range Rover clients opt for some personalisation," says Amba. Range Rover and Range Rover Sport drive the highest level of personalisation. "The investment depends entirely on the level of personalisation a client chooses—in some cases clients spend an additional ₹1 crore," says Amba.

Range Rover has curated a bespoke Sawai Collection for India. Limited to just 18 units across three editions—Jaipur, Jodhpur and Jaisalmer —the collection features polished chrome Range Rover lettering with a 24K gold-plated surround.
