Living, Breathing Lustre

AT ITS PINNACLE, luxury is not something that can be created on demand. It belongs to the realm of the irreplaceable. To this rarefied world belong Basra pearls—treasures of nature whose legendary beauty can no longer be summoned from the sea.

Born in the warm, shallow waters of the Persian Gulf, these luminous jewels once graced the necks of maharanis, the turbans of emperors, and the treasure chests of great dynasties. Unlike cultured pearls, each was conceived entirely by nature, through years of silent alchemy within a living oyster. Today, exceptional Basra pearls, particularly those assembled into harmonious strands, are among the most coveted treasures for collectors.

This rarity is exquisitely embodied by the Nayab-e-Khas, a magnificent seven-strand Basra pearl necklace by Hyderabad-based jewellery house Kishandas & Co. Its extraordinary 680 pearls were sourced and collected for 18 years before being assembled into a symphony of graded symmetry, coaxed from nature's exquisite irregularities. Each pearl possesses the individuality of a fingerprint, its unrepeatable contours becoming the signature of its authenticity.

Inspired by the opulent layered necklaces of Indian royalty, this price-on-request masterpiece radiates an extraordinary warmth, its translucent lustre seeming to emanate from within. It is a distinct unreplicable glow that promises its fortunate possessor, the aura of a connoisseur.
