Rare Melody

EVEN THE FAINTEST pluck of a sitar string can summon the soul of India. But to give this ancient classical instrument its voice demands more than craftsmanship. It requires an inheritance of musical intuition, passed through generations, where material knowledge of wood steel wires and an understanding of sound vibrations converge in a perfect harmony.

For 120 years, the Rikhi Ram family has perfected this alchemy, crafting instruments for legends from Pandit Ravi Shankar and Ustad Vilayat Khan to the Beatles.

Its crowning masterpiece is the Ravi Shankar Model, a professional-grade Burmese teak sitar, handcrafted by the Ajay Rikhi Ram to the legendary maestro's exacting musical specifications.

Seven years of seasoning prepare the wood for its destiny. Specially cultivated tumba gourds are selected for resonance, while silver-and-tin-coated steel strings lend the instrument its distinctive warmth and brilliance. Every joint is engineered for enduring tonal stability; every surface polished rich, bearing intricate floral and geometric inlay.

Yet its ultimate luxury is its individuality – its distinctive sound. Each sitar possesses what Sitar Maestro Pt Shubhenra Rao calls " a deep resonance that vibrates within your soul".

With barely seven or eight instruments crafted annually, a waiting period of three to five months and prices ranging from ₹2.75 lakh to ₹7.5 lakh, this is no ordinary musical instrument. It is where sound becomes luminous.
