change rates. The category was approximately 40% larger than its pre-pandemic size in 2019.

Bain identifies immersive dining concepts, private clubs and multisensory experiences as drivers of demand. Some restaurants bring together chefs, artists, designers and even perfumers to transform a meal into a carefully orchestrated experience.

India's affluent consumers are displaying a similar appetite. The 'Atlas of Affluence 2026' found 17% of respondents spent ₹2 lakh or more annually on fine dining and gourmet experiences.

Kotak Private Banking also identifies curated culinary experiences, including cooking classes with Michelin-starred chefs and elaborate tasting menus, among indulgences attracting ultra-high-net-worth consumers.

WELLNESS: THE NEW STATUS SYMBOL

If travel is about extraordinary memories, wellness is increasingly about investing in one's health. At tulâh Clinical Wellness at Kozhikode in Kerala, built at an investment of over $100 million, stays cost approximately $1,250 per night plus taxes. Guests typically book programmes lasting seven, 14 or 21 nights, with growing interest in 28-night stays.

These programmes combine medical consultations, diagnostics, Ayurveda and personalised treatment protocols. Metabolic health, weight management, detoxification, stress recovery, sleep and longevity are among the most popular areas.

"Luxury in India is moving from what you own to how you feel and function, and the most precious things now are time, expertise and attention," says Cíara O'Shea, Chief Commercial Officer at tulâh.
