

₹25,000-30,000 for the right chef. For truly exceptional experiences, we have successfully gone considerably higher," he says.

According to Sanghvi, top international chefs typically cook for 50-60 guests per night at these experiences, and given the demand, selling out is not difficult. He gives the example of dinners featuring Maido, the acclaimed Peruvian restaurant named the World No. 1 on The World's 50 Best Restaurants list by the William Reed Business Media, selling out within an hour of a single Instagram post.

"The biggest misconception is that the diner is necessarily an older, ultra-wealthy customer," says Sanghvi. Increasingly, the customers are younger professionals, entrepreneurs, and people in their thirties and forties who may hesitate to spend ₹30,000 on a luxury product but are willing to pay that amount for an experience they value.

For these consumers, luxury is shifting from ownership to access. A meal prepared by a celebrated chef is not something that can be replicated, stored, or purchased later. Its appeal lies partly in its fleeting nature.

1 A meal prepared by Italian chef Massimo Bottura priced at ₹75,000 was sold out

2 Farmlore in Bengaluru is an intimate 18-seat restaurant centred on ingredients grown on its farm and operates at around 95% occupancy