BEYOND THE BIG CAT

Perhaps the most significant change is the emergence of destinations outside conventional tiger tourism circuits.

Jawai in Rajasthan has become particularly attractive. Unlike a typical national park, its leopards inhabit granite landscapes shared with local communities, creating opportunities for a different kind of wildlife experience.

Among the pioneers in establishing Jawai as a luxury wildlife destination is safari provider SUJÁN. "The premise of creating SUJÁN JAWAI was to take conservation tourism in India to the next level, to demonstrate that a safari camp could make a tangible positive impact on a landscape, its wildlife and its people, while delivering a guest experience on par with the very best in the world," says Jaisal Singh, Founder, SUJÁN.

SUJÁN's properties, including Jawai (at ₹1,96,000 per night) and Sher Bagh (at ₹1,37,000 per night) in Ranthambore, operate with limited inventory. Singh says demand for immersive, nature-based travel has strengthened since the pandemic. "Guests have become more discerning, valuing privacy, specialist knowledge and meaningful engagement with the wilderness rather than judging a holiday by a particular sighting."

ITC's Storii Jawai, meanwhile, is a 15-room retreat
