Foldable silver

THE ARRIVAL OF Apple's first foldable iPhone brings an entirely new silhouette to the brand's familiar design language. But for those who prefer their technology to be as distinctive as their jewellery, the standard finish is only the beginning. Caviar dresses the iPhone Duo in sculpted sterling silver, turning a technological first into a collector's statement.

Caviar's Liquid Metal edition takes the iPhone Duo into a more rarefied realm, with a bespoke exterior that places precious metal and sculptural artistry above conventional minimalism.

Sterling silver is shaped into fluid, sculptural relief, and finished with a high mirror polish. Sweeping organic contours give the surface the appearance of molten metal suspended in motion, catching and redirecting light as the device opens and closes. The interplay of reflective silver and the folding form creates a piece that feels closer to contemporary jewellery than conventional smartphone customisation. If not this, Caviar Design Lab can also enhance the appearance as per your preferences.

Diamonds, gold, and AI

FOR THOSE WHO expect their technology to do more than follow commands, Vertu's Agent Q Himalaya Alligator Gold & Full Diamond brings AI into the realm of haute luxury. The handset pairs a Himalaya alligator leather with diamond detailing, while thick gold plating across its more than 320 hand-assembled components adds a layer of material richness to the engineering.

Its defining feature is Ruby Talk, accessed through VERTU's signature Ruby Key. A single press opens access to more than 200 specialised AI agents across five categories, designed to coordinate tasks and manage complex requests involving travel, business, and logistics. Rather than relying solely on individual apps, the system is built around agents that can plan and execute multi-step tasks. The Agent Q is a personal digital assistant dressed for the collector's cabinet.
