Among first-time buyers in Tier-II and Tier-III markets, watches lead by sales value, while footwear generates volumes. Apparel, accessories, beauty and grooming are also gaining traction. "Wealth is distributed. With rise of digital payments and enhanced accessibility provided by online platforms, consumers in Tier-II and Tier-III markets are embracing luxury e-commerce. Additionally, in several categories, Tier-IV's share is increasing," says Asthana.

"The luxury consumer in Tier-II and Tier-III cities is as aware of global brands and trends as consumers in Delhi, Mumbai or Bengaluru but the approach to purchasing can be more considered and value conscious. Consumers are willing to pay a premium when they see value, making affordable luxury and premium categories more relevant," says Asthana.

For expensive online purchases, reassurance matters. Tata CLiQ Luxury offers assisted selling, personal relationship managers for select high-value customers, authenticity assurances and post-purchase support. "Trust remains critical. Authenticity, reviews, secure payments, delivery assurance,
