humility, down-to-earth nature and approachable demeanour endeared him to the entire group, making our journey not just a political one but a shared voyage fuelled by empathy and camaraderie.

In the heart-warming camaraderie of the Bharat Jodo Yatra, I found myself enveloped in the embrace of a compassionate community. Priyanka Gandhi ji, in particular, consistently demonstrated a heartfelt concern for each of us. The warmth and affection emanating from the Gandhi family stand as a powerful testament to their genuine care for every citizen of this country. Their influence stretches far and wide, resonating deeply across the diverse tapestry of India and endearing them to people throughout the nation. In their presence, I felt not just the touch of leadership but the genuine warmth of a caring family.

This Yatra wasn't merely an exploration of India—it was equally a discovery of one another. In the middle of our shared travels, there existed moments of delightful camaraderie. Many fellow yatris I met harboured a curious fascination for my political journey. One recurring question often surfaced—a rather amusing anecdote in my political career. It circled around the time I had contested for the legislative assembly elections on an INC ticket, a journey that pitted me against my own father, who stood as a candidate on a BJP ticket. This peculiar situation frequently ignited intriguing discussions, infusing a dose of humour into our exchanges. It revealed that even within the most earnest pursuits, there existed pockets of light-heartedness and curiosity.

Being a native of the Northeast, I encountered a notable challenge during the Yatra—the vast contrast in culinary preferences. In my homeland, I was accustomed to straightforward and simple meals. However, as we traversed diverse regions during this Yatra, I found myself embarking on an unexpected culinary adventure. The array of flavours and cuisines that surrounded me was nothing short of enchanting, a delightful exploration of diverse tastes that added a flavourful dimension to our journey.

Immersing myself in different cultures offered a chance to forge profound bonds with my fellow yatris hailing from every corner of our vast
