V.D. Satheesan, the Opposition leader in Kerala, spearheaded the organization of the twenty-day leg of the Yatra in the state. According to him, this endeavour proved to be the most challenging event he had ever organized. It required meticulous planning and execution, from assembling a team to managing schedules, accommodation, food, transportation, crowds and security. What was even more remarkable was that Satheesan and many senior Congress leaders participated in the Yatra themselves, further bolstering its significance. In many places, what was initially anticipated as a few hundred participants swelled to tens of thousands, presenting a considerable challenge in crowd management. The public's enthusiasm and involvement were palpable, almost overshadowing the Yatra's organized aspects.

For the Congress in Kerala, the Bharat Jodo Yatra held immense importance. The state's political landscape is intrinsically linked to national politics and the party's relevance hinges on its national counterpart. The resounding message conveyed by the Yatra breathed new life into the Congress, rekindling its organizing prowess and fostering a newfound sense of unity.

Numerous senior Congress leaders walked alongside Rahul Gandhi through the Kerala leg. Many expressed their desire to participate in future yatras, should Rahul decide to embark on an east–west traverse of India. Some even suggested that it would be beneficial for the Congress to connect with the people by its leaders embarking on padyatras for a month every year! This renewed sense of possibility underscores the commitment of the Congress to stay closely connected with the electorate.

During the Yatra's journey through Kerala, thirty-three meetings were organized with various segments of the population, each meticulously planned and executed, to cover as many collectives representing a cross-section of society, curated through discussions within the state organizing committee. Civil society members such as I were equally enthusiastic to participate and contribute to this historic endeavour.

For many who initially hesitated to join the Yatra due to reservations about being associated with a political figure, regrets surfaced as the Yatra
