the visuals that would need to be captured, how we were going to relay a moving Yatra live, and how we would capture moments and stories that embodied the essence of the Bharat Jodo Yatra. But amid all these challenges, the one thing that stood out was the palpable positive energy any talk of the Yatra generated.

A yatra of this scale needed mammoth planning. Planning the route, content, the stories that came out of it … planning that would continue for months at the same pace and the same enthusiasm.

Before we knew it, the day had arrived and we were all in the temple town of Kanyakumari, in the southern state of Tamil Nadu on 7 September 2022. I was particularly obsessed with the first two steps that Rahul ji would take to embark on this journey, and remember having many conversations with our camerapersons to capture those, no matter what!

The Yatra was a breath of fresh air in Indian politics, not just because it cared to listen to people, but because it was a genuine effort to bridge the divide between people and those they choose to be represented by.

To me the most everlasting legacy of the Bharat Jodo Yatra will be how it ushered in love, mohabbat, in mainstream politics. I often now wonder how strange it is that our politics is bereft of the notion and idea of love, the most important thing in the world. Eventually what binds us as a human race, as groups, as a society and as a nation is underlying love, and yet it wasn't ever mentioned in politics before. Politics, which determines our future and shapes our destiny, was so far devoid of love—but not any more. 'Nafrat ke bazaar mein mohabbat ki dukan' will be the everlasting legacy of the Bharat Jodo Yatra.

Our teams got the visuals and pictures first, and I often found myself immersed in them. It was the sheer honesty of these pictures that struck me the most. They captured moments that weren't choreographed for cameras, but sprung from genuine warmth, empathy and concern. Moments of mohabbat. These pictures showed us a person who walked the talk on love in the toxic times of hate.

One of the other great contributions and achievements of the Bharat Jodo Yatra will undoubtedly be the safe space it gave women. Visuals of
