would mean creating a visionary blueprint of where India should be when she turns hundred (in 2047) by carefully rethinking socio-economic and political paradigms. It would also mean redressing structural flaws in India's existing institutions, creating new institutions equipped to address fresh challenges and activating all of India's systems (her political parties, bureaucracy, community stakeholders, interest groups, etc.) in furthering India's constitutional promise. A nation is not governed just by formal systems and political alliances, but also by informal systems and non-political alliances.

It is only when progressives comprehensively reshape both India's software and hardware that we can create a symphony from the multiple voices of India and thereby forge a consensus on how we can proceed as a society. That necessitates giving equal space and agency to all members of an orchestra. Reading D. Raja's, Supriya Sule's, Mehbooba Mufti's and Sanjay Raut's essays, it is clear that all of them see themselves as joint custodians of the constitutional Idea of India. A sonata to an eventual symphony, the Yatra conjoined them in a renewed endeavour to reunite the nation and reclaim India's soul. In doing so, we can also reclaim our own humanity.

---

1 'Uniting the Nation: Re-engineering India's Hardware and Software', by Pushparaj Deshpande, in Pushparaj Deshpande and Gurdeep Sappal (eds.), The Great Indian Manthan: State, Statecraft and the Republic, Penguin Random House India, New Delhi, 2023.

2 Ibid.

3 There has been a 28 per cent annual rise in sedition cases between 2014 and 2020, as per 'A Decade of Darkness: The Story of Sedition in India', Article 14, https://sedition.article-14.com (last accessed on 4 February 2020).

4 'Autocratization Turns Viral: Democracy Report 2021', V-Dem Institute, University of Gothenburg, https://v-dem.net/documents/12/dr_2021.pdf (last accessed on 7 April 2021);