detail in such a short time? I think Rahul Gandhi was teaching all of us to discover India, and he now has an army of highly disciplined karyakartas (workers) behind him. For me as well, the Yatra marked a new chapter in my life.

Finally, I also feel that the Congress party organization showed its true strength to the country. To organize a rally or even an election campaign is difficult, but that is nothing compared to the logistical challenges involved in organizing the Bharat Jodo Yatra. There are those who desperately pray for a Congress-mukt Bharat (Congress-free India). To them, the Yatra demonstrated that the party is well and alive in nearly every block of every district in India. There are lakhs of committed karyakartas just waiting for some direction. And they are willing to keep performing miracles for the party. If the Congress party keeps organizing such programmes periodically, the cadre will remain motivated and keep attracting more and more new people to the party.

Bharat Jodo brings up many emotions that are difficult to articulate in one small article. But three things stand out for me—I have newfound respect for India's vast diversities and beauty; I have formed strong friendships that will last me a lifetime; and I have found boundless strength within myself to take on any challenge life may throw at me. Because, as I thought to myself at the Yatra's culmination at Lal Chowk in Srinagar, 'Raah muskhil thi, par humne haar nahi maani; manzil par pahuch kar likhi, apni safalta ki kahani (The path was difficult, but we did not give up; we reached the destination and wrote the story of our success).'
