entrepreneurship. Demonetization hit small traders and entrepreneurs hard. Then, during the lockdown, when big corporate houses were earning profits per hour, the stamina of small entrepreneurs drained. No effort was made to protect them. The economic disparity cannot be bridged by industries that are entirely capital-based. Employment-intensive production units are needed for the uplift of ‘employment-centric development’. Otherwise, we will move away from the latter. The creation of small enterprises can be linked to agriculture and other products of rural India. Several fundamental suggestions emerged in this regard.

The journey continued. The next destination was Mhow, the birthplace of the architect of the Constitution, Dr B.R. Ambedkar. On the way, a youth employment council was under way, and the companions joined the journey. In the evening, a social justice meeting took place. Paying homage to the memories of Dr Ambedkar, the discussion revolved around how justice could be delivered to the marginalized communities standing on the sidelines in the new century. In an era where government jobs are diminishing, the contract system has taken place. Where there is no commitment, the contractors are not obligated to labour rights, nor does the constitutionally provided social justice and equality have any control over them. Dalit writers, thinkers and social activists participated in this discussion.

The next day, a small meeting was held in Rajwada, Indore. In recent years, the citizens of Indore have felt great pride in being continuously honoured for cleanliness. Rarely does someone talk to the sanitation workers who contribute to this cleanliness. The meeting started with their felicitation. Father Varghese of the Universal Solidarity Movement also joined the Yatra. He continues to prepare schoolchildren for nation-building according to the Constitution. He has been unwell in recent days. When he joined the Yatra, it was said to him that he should meet Rahul ji. He said that his prayers and feelings had reached Rahul ji with every step—meeting face to face was not necessary. Indeed, such a journey is not physical. Do these feet propel these journeys? Or is it courage and shared self-esteem?
