still not revealed his identity—was legitimate and they should continue communicating.

Snowden was confident he had chosen the right media partners. "Laura and Glenn are among the few who reported fearlessly on controversial topics through this period, even in the face of withering personal criticism." Snowden told the New York Times. He ultimately decided to trust Poitras when "we came to a point in the verification and vetting process where I discovered Laura was more suspicious of me than I was of her, and I'm famously paranoid."[3]

A Big Decision

Although Snowden had grown to trust Poitras by the time they met in Hong Kong, his faith in her was
