

The Guardian slowly reported the surveillance programs Snowden had found during his years working for the NSA.

from the NSA documents leaked by Snowden were published in newspapers and magazines around the world. In June 2013, Der Spiegel, the German news magazine, reported US intelligence agents had broken into European Union offices in Washington, DC; New York; and Brussels, Belgium, and planted surveillance devices.

The following month, the Guardian newspaper revealed details of XKeyscore, a tool used by the NSA that allowed government analysts to search through vast troves of e-mails, online chats, and Internet browsing histories of millions of people without prior approval.

The fall brought more information on secret programs. In September 2013, the New York Times
