request. Though it looked as if Russia was Snowden's only realistic choice, he withdrew his asylum request when Russian president Putin said Snowden would have to stop any work aimed at "harming our American partners."[6]

Three Latin American countries, including Venezuela, eventually said they would accept Snowden. But after the incident involving the diversion of Bolivian President Morales's plane, Snowden knew any plane he boarded for Latin America would have to pass over US-friendly skies. He would likely never arrive at his destination. On July 16, 2013, in a press conference at
