"I read intelligence carefully," said Dianne Feinstein, US senator and chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee. "I know that people are trying to get us. . . . This is the reason the FBI now has 10,000 people doing intelligence on counterterrorism. . . . It's to ferret this out before it happens. It's called protecting America."[2] John Kerry, US secretary of state, said Snowden was a coward and a traitor and that he betrayed his country.

Similar negative views were voiced by news pundits, including Bob Schieffer of CBS News, Jeffrey Toobin of the New Yorker magazine, and Richard Cohen of
