Note that while each agreement corresponds to at least one category, some correspond to several.

The IOs in the issue space vary in terms of their propensity for signing information-sharing agreements. Figure 4.3 shows the average number of information-sharing agreements signed by each IO in the development space in a given year. Newer IOs, such as AIIB and NDB, sign such agreements most frequently, while some smaller IOs, such as BDEAC, BDEGL, and the EADB, have never shared information. However, most IOs—including prominent regional banks like the ADB, AfDB, and IADB—sign a new information-sharing agreement about once every two to three years, which suggests that information sharing is a fairly widespread form of interorganizational cooperation. Moreover, because AIIB and NDB are in the data for only 2016–2018 and 2015–2018 respectively, they sign few agreements in absolute terms even if their relative propensity to sign agreements is high.
