4.5 Concluding Thoughts: The Role of Sidelining in Combating Populist Resistance

This chapter explored and tested our theory of sidelining populists via information sharing among IOs, demonstrating how IOs adapt when faced with the challenge of a populist-led major stakeholder. We found that populists' resistance often leads to a loss of crucial member-provided information, prompting IOs to collaborate more closely by sharing knowledge among themselves. This pattern was supported through quantitative analysis in the development sector and a case study focusing on Trump's presidency and its impact on US-led IOs.
