the nature of the populist threat before examining how the IO deployed appeasement and sidelining strategies. We analyze how these tactics targeted both populist leaders and their constituencies, illustrating the interplay between the two.

Our analysis includes the following examples:

- EU and Hungary: Addressing challenges posed by Viktor Orbán's illiberal governance
- EU and the UK: Managing the populist-led Brexit campaign
- NATO and Turkey: Responding to Erdoğan's geopolitical maneuvering
- NATO and the US: Countering Trump's threats to withdraw support
- UN Peacekeeping and the US: Navigating funding cuts under Trump
- WHO and the US: Addressing populist criticisms during the COVID-19 pandemic
- WTO and the US: Confronting Trump's protectionist rhetoric and actions
- UNFPA and the US: Mitigating attacks on reproductive health initiatives
- Paris Agreement and the US/Brazil: Handling Trump's and Bolsonaro's withdrawal threats
- IMF and Greece: Managing populist backlash during the eurozone crisis
- ICC and African populist states: Countering collective resistance to the International Criminal Court's authority

Across these cases, we find that IOs consistently employed the strategies outlined in our framework to push back against populist resistance. They adapted their responses to the specific challenges posed, using a mix of appeasement and sidelining. These efforts have often succeeded in preserving the IOs' legitimacy and functionality, even in the face of severe populist pressures.

The chapter concludes by reflecting on the implications of these findings for the long-term resilience of IOs and the broader resurgence of populism. By illustrating how IOs navigate these challenges, we shed light on their capacity to adapt in an era of rising populist sentiment.
