"As this is the third iteration of the bow, we've learned a couple of little tricks," Bobbitt says. "For this film, Hawkeye draws the arrows much quicker in certain scenes, so we needed to adjust the draw to make it easier. To do that, we make a mold in a pulled-back position and remake the entire bow so that when he grabs it and needs to pull fast, it's not as much stress. He's drawing arrows in excess of 100 times a day over a 12-hour shoot—we've got to help him out all we can!"

