With all the design elements in place, the sleek and silent Hydra Submarine became what would have been a technological marvel for the 1940s — with water jets allowing for steering, a front rudder and internal systems trimming the boat, and special Hydra glass offering better visibility.

Concept art by Henrick Tamm.