Producer Kevin Feige explains: "Falcon has been around since the late '60s and—as all Marvel costumes do through the decades—his costume has undergone a transition. Sometimes it's white and low-cut with an open chest and reddish feathers, and other times it's more practical and militaristic. We wanted to do a little bit of both. So you'll see it has its roots in a pararescue team that we're saying Sam Wilson was a part of, but the wings open very much like the classic silhouette of the Falcon."

