

After the maps were drawn and a basic layout agreed upon, set designers built up a Cave model that included lighting and action figure placement.

RIVA: "Tony Bohorquez did a beautiful job with the Cave model. Even in this day of computer imagery and being able to walk through a set on a computer screen, it really does help to see a model. There's nothing that compares. It's very tactile. With a computer image, you can't touch it, you can't easily see how the light falls on it. Models take you to that part of your brain that wants to see things with dimension and scale."
