

Initial scouting for exterior and interior shots of the Stark Estate reinforced one undeniable fact: There was nothing available to the film's producers in the real world that could match the upsized scale necessary for Stark's character.

RIVA: "We exhausted every house, every location, every possible place to go. Our biggest challenge was finding a house we could possibly have access to that would represent the wealth of Tony Stark. He's Microsoft rich. His tastes are very elaborate and he's very rich, and that's the worst kind of combination to try and recreate in a movie."
