The Afghan town of Gulmira was where Iron Man first put himself in the role of avenging hero, bringing the full force of his newly developed armor down upon the terrorists menacing the local populace. The location of this key scene was, again, not shot in deepest Afghanistan, but Riva knew he could find someplace in the Los Angeles area to imitate the remote landscape.

RIVA: "We settled on a place that had been used for a couple of old Western TV shows. Really bare bones. It took four weeks and we built up the village out of our surroundings. Had a lot of rubble strewn around. I'm happy to say that the place is still in use for other film shoots."
