

Page 152-153: First Flight storyboards (Phil Keller)

Storyboard artist PHIL KELLER includes directional arrows that clearly indicate his desire for the camera to pan in a variety of different angles and pitches. As this sequence tracks Iron Man's flight across the night sky, the subtle touches in Keller's storytelling can be noticed. The first frame of the sequence highlights a man holding a fishing pole in the foreground. As the next frame switches focus on Iron Man, streaking high up in the sky of the shot's background, the fishing pole is still visible, giving the audience a continuity of perspective.