

The inclusion of the Zero Bike (right) among Tony Stark's automotive toys, as well as its designs (left), reflected Jon Favreau's love of bike building and the "monster garage" ethos, which played perfectly into the main character's hands-on, take-charge attitude in his Workshop. Its hubless wheel design also represents cutting-edge technology that, while tantalizingly close in the real world, is the kind of thing Stark would be tinkering with and perfecting as a hobby.
