

Riva: "As the script developed, it became more and more an homage to his father and more and more a kind of a retro thing started creeping in. We have all these immense variations of something really high-tech and something a little lower tech. Once you figure out all the things you have to have, then you start breaking it down into what you're actually going to build. And so, those pieces start to come together and because they're so massive, you can't build them all in one place."
