Tony finds himself alone for the first time since he became Iron Man, without his staff or his high-tech gadgets to fall back on. The armor itself becomes a burden as he drags it slowly toward a nearby home.

"Tony walks into the backyard of a house," Brzeski says. "We weren't trying to create a big, huge barn. It was like a mechanic or a dad had a tool shed in his backyard where he repaired vehicles. Maybe he had some kind of repair business. It had to be very open."

