14. ‘Geelani Was in Bhuj with SIMI group’, Times of India, 20 December 2001.

15. Neeta Sharma, ‘Pak Uses Fanatics to Spread Terror in India’, Hindustan Times, 21 December 2001.

16. Ibid.

17. Ibid.

18. Swati Chaturvedi, ‘Terror Suspect Frequent Visitor to Pakistan Mission’, Hindustan Times, 21 December 2001.

19. ‘Person of the Week’, Sunday Times of India, 23 December 2001.

20. ‘Logic of an Anti-Terrorist Court’, Lies of Our Times Exhibition, 2004.

The Strange Case of Qays Al Kareem

1. S.A.R. Geelani, a lecturer in Arabic at Delhi University, was an accused in the ‘13 December 2001—Attack on Parliament Case’. Geelani, along with two others of his co-accused, was sentenced to death by a special anti-terrorism court under the Prevention of Terrorism Act (POTA; repealed in 2004). Geelani was arrested shortly after 13 December 2001 by the Special Cell of the Delhi Police and detained without trial under POTA (then an ordinance). The evidence produced by the Special Cell on the basis of which he was convicted by the POTA court consisted of a mistranslation of the transcript of a mobile phone conversation between Geelani and his stepbrother in Kashmir that was recorded through an unauthorized act of telephone surveillance.

   The verdict was challenged in the Delhi High Court. A protracted campaign by Geelani’s friends, colleagues and human rights activists, together with his legal defence by a team of advocates, was able to reverse the POTA court’s verdict. The ‘evidence’ was found inadmissible, and Geelani was acquitted on 29 October 2003, after spending nearly two years on death row in Delhi’s Tihar jail.

   Subsequently, the Delhi Police appealed against the acquittal in the Supreme Court. On 8 February 2005, Geelani was shot by unidentified assailants outside the house of Nandita Haksar, one of his lawyers. Haksar and her husband rushed Geelani to the All India Institute of Medical Sciences, where he was operated upon for three bullet injuries. Geelani survived this attack and is currently recovering. On 14 February